

OUTLOOK & REVIEW

- > The Fund returned -0.49% Class A (-0.40% Class F) in December outperforming their MSCI World Index benchmark during the month. Sectors that boosted performance were Technology, Health Care, Materials and Real Estate. Sectors with the biggest detraction were Industrials, Communication Services, Consumer Staples and Energy.
- > Extended Stay (STAY US): Following a rough month of October in which all lodging stocks succumbed to concerns of a U.S. slowdown spurred by the potential for hawkish action from the Federal Reserve, STAY reported a solid quarter which led to a sharp reversal in performance in November. RevPAR was well ahead of expectations and the company continues to divest their worst performing hotels at high teens free cash flow multiples, yet somehow the stock only trades at 10.7x.
- > Michael Kors (KORS US) has suffered since announcing the acquisition of Versace for $2.1B. This deal was a thesis changer for us as we owned the stock for its improving same store sales, its solid balance sheet and for the downside EPS protection it offered through solid free cash flow that could support strong share repurchases. We have been trimming our position.
- > With the Fed having blinked and migrating towards a data dependent stance, trade tensions dying down a tad, market multiples pulling in by three turns and equity leverage greatly reduced post sell-off, we believe there is a widow of opportunity for stocks to move higher in the months ahead.
